

Abstract

The present invention relates to a synergistic method of gene transfection, including gene therapy of human diseases. The invention provides use and preparation of specific combinations of cationic lipids and cationic polymers for the transfection of nucleic acids into host cells. This invention includes also the use of described combinations in specific systems for gene transfection, expression, repair, activation, inhibition and regulation.